

Meet Your Future Reader

A companion worksheet to Who Wants Your Story?

Think of one person who could connect with your book. A real or imagined reader is fine. Your answers are a starting point and can change as your manuscript develops.

1. Who is the reader you picture?

Describe a person, their situation, interests, or experiences.

2. What might bring this person to your book?

Consider a question, problem, curiosity, feeling, or desire.

Bernadette Donnelly

Author • Independent Publisher • Writing Coach

Meet Your Future Reader

A companion worksheet to Who Wants Your Story?

3. What does this reader hope to gain?

Knowledge, enjoyment, encouragement, connection, or a new perspective?

4. What would you like the reader to take away?

What should they know, feel, remember, or be ready to do?

Bring Your Answers Together

I am writing this book for someone who...

...because I want them to...

Keep this description nearby as you write. Update it when you learn more.

Your Next Step

Visit BernadetteDonnelly.com to learn more about writing coaching and bring your book idea to life.

Bernadette Donnelly

Author • Independent Publisher • Writing Coach